For Ottawa app, snow can't come soon enough

TECHNOLOGY

By connecting users, snowplow sharing to pick up this winter

Brianna Charlebois
For Metro | Ottawa

While most people are hoping to delay the first snowfall of the season, an Ottawa-based app is hoping to see snow flying as soon as possible.

Touchplow, an Ottawa-based app helps make the transition into the snowy months a little easier launched last year, and had a great first year. That surprised even the app's developers, because last winter was warmer than usual.

"Last year the app did remarkably well," says Dan Rogall, the creative director in charge of marketing and branding for Touchplow. "When we started, no one knew about us. After the first snowstorm last year, the app was picked up nationally. By the end of the winter we got up to 6,000 likes on Facebook."

The Uber-style app allows users to connect with experienced snowplow professionals nearby. It is free to download and allows for specification on what to clear, when, what equipment is needed and ideal budgets.

"The price depends on how large your lot is," says Rogall. "Pricing is based on an algorithm but if you want the snow cleared quickly, you can pay a premium price and that speeds up the process."

Meteorologists expect this winter could be snowier than previous years, because of the La Niña effect.

"The biggest problem we faced last year was that there tended to be a larger demand on the app than there were workers," Rogall adds. "This year we're planning on opening it up to people who own snow blowers and want to make some extra money."

SUFFRAGE

Women's voices heard

Brieanna Charlebois
For Metro | Ottawa

Like the women who blazed a path for them a century ago, an Ottawa women's choir raised their voices Sunday night.

The Hypatia's Voice Women's Choir brought Our Grandmother's Were Strong: Songs of Suffrage & Strength, to the Dominion-Chalmers United Church. The performance is meant to honour the Canadian suffrage movement, 100 years after women gained the right to vote.

The performance is meant to explore the experiences of Canadian women some of whom even went to prison, but kept singing anyway.

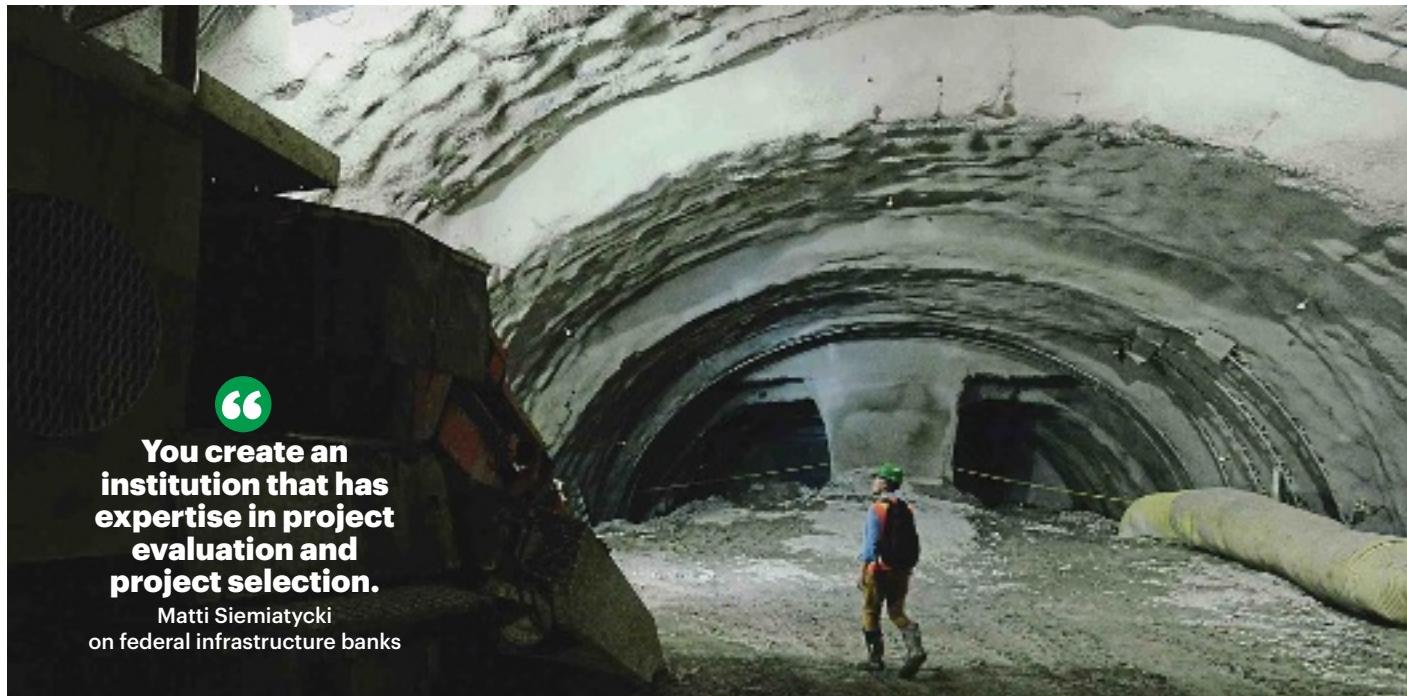

"Singing is one of the best ways to experience and to convey this message," said Laura Hawley, the choir's artistic director. "It addresses the broader picture of making sure all voices heard and represented. It's the perfect metaphor especially because music played a large role in the movement at the time."

The program was initially developed in collaboration with the Canadian Museum of History to complement their October exhibition.

This concert was a two-hour version of the program that follows the history of the movement through the experience's of the women who fought for the vote.

Ottawa sets up capital for infrastructure

Ryan Tumilty
Metro | Ottawa

This week, Federal Finance Minister Bill Morneau is expected to announce the creation of a Canadian Infrastructure bank to invest in projects like roads, highways, bridges and transit systems across the country.

We talked to Matti Siemiatycki, an associate professor in the Department of Geography and Planning at the University of Toronto, for more details on the concept.

What is an infrastructure bank?

Siemiatycki said the role of an infrastructure bank is to finance large public infrastructure projects. The role of a federal infrastructure bank would be to provide capital to provincial and municipal governments.

The bank could also attract large institutional investors, like pension funds, interested in investing in projects, which could raise more money to spend on them.

What are the downsides?

"There is no free money. Either the federal government is going to borrow money or private investors are going to invest in infrastructure, but if it's actually a bank, those investors are going to want their money back," he said.

He adds municipalities don't have trouble financing projects.

"The challenges they have is not getting people to lend them money, it's finding ways to pay it back."

What about the upsides?

Siemiatycki said a program like this centralizes decision making and builds up experience.

"You create a national centre of excellence for infrastructure. You create an institution that has expertise in project evaluation and project selection."

He said that could be better in the long term.

"We have a problem with cost overruns right across this country," he said.

Will this mean more transit gets built more quickly?

He said what the federal government builds with the infrastructure bank will depend on how involved those investors are, because most projects don't generate a lot of money to pay back loans.

"The majority of infrastructure in Canada doesn't have a revenue stream," he said.

Transit does generate revenue, but that doesn't usually even cover operating costs. He said airports, seaports and water projects are among the only projects that generate revenue.

STUDENT LIFE

Recent grad helps renters beware

A recent Carleton grad has created a platform for students to rate their apartments and landlords, hoping to avoid any surprises after move-in day.

Finding the right place to live can be tough, especially for students from out-of-town, said founder and CEO of Dwellyo, Omar Madi.

"(Students) don't know anything about the local neighbourhood. They don't know anything about the landlord's building. They just throw a dart in the dark and whatever they get they stick with," he said.

Even having spent several years in Ottawa completing a mechanical engineering degree, Madi recently ran into trouble renting an apartment himself.

He'd already signed a rental agreement when he showed up at the apartment to set up the Internet and found two policemen at the door.

Turns out the landlord had already rented the apartment to someone else, without telling the property manager, who had rented it to Madi.

That left Madi struggling to find a new place to live, with just a week left before he had to move out of his former home.

The plan for his website is to "minimize post-signing surprises," he said, and he's starting with reviews.

Reviewers can rate their landlord, building management, location, overall experience and more from 'terrible' to 'excellent,' and also provide other input.

But that's just the start. Eventually, Madi wants to build out the website to a "full solution" that would help from start to finish with the renting or leasing process, a bit like Airbnb, he said, but for long-term tenants, not overnight stays.

Surgeon aims to identify at-risk patients ahead of crisis

A "top-notch" surgeon and researcher recently hired by the heart institute is bringing two new studies to Ottawa that he hopes will keep more patients out from under his scalpel.

Dr. Juan Grau, originally from Spain and former attending academic cardiac surgeon at the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine, was selected from more than 75 applicants from around the world to fill a spot at the University of Ottawa's Heart Institute.

In addition to expertise in cardiac surgery, Grau brings $6.4 million in research, which aims to create tools that will identify patients more at risk of major aortic and mitral valve issues before they have a health crisis.

"Aortic problems happen from one minute to the next," said Grau. "So you are having dinner or you're with your friends and all of a sudden you feel this ... shearing tearing pain ... at that moment, (your) life is now different forever."

The last case Grau had in the U.S. was with a mechanic in his 40s. The man had been working on his sister's car when "he felt this pain, and it was a disaster."

Indigenous adults shamed from speaking languages are key to revival

There's a generation of indigenous people across Canada who were once shamed for speaking their own language.

Now, people who didn't learn their mother tongue from their parents are key to saving and revitalizing the languages, British Columbia researchers say.

Two University of Victoria indigenous languages experts whose own parents did not speak their aboriginal languages at home are moving to bridge the language gap with a mentor-apprentice program that teaches adults.

"There were generations of people, my parents and grandparents, who were sent to residential school and forbidden to speak their language and beaten and shamed and ridiculed and punished in all sorts of awful ways," said Peter Jacobs, a UVic linguist and fluent speaker of his Squamish Nation language.

"A lot of those people who came out of that school system chose not to teach their children the language," he said. "My dad doesn't speak Squamish as his first language for that very reason. That caused a big disruption."

The program focuses on adults learning an indigenous language by being paired with a fluent speaker who is a mentor. The teacher and student are immersed in a curriculum where classes could involve hunting expeditions or family chores but are conducted entirely in the indigenous language.

Conjugal visits help offenders reintegrate

JUSTICE SYSTEM

Program increases public safety, experts say

Lee Chapelle has fond memories of spending afternoons with his wife in the mid-1990s, barbecuing in a small yard while his young children played in the grass and mimicked the cows' moos as the animals grazed in a nearby field.

"It was a really big motivation to come home to my family to be able to spend time with my newborn baby and realize just how much was out there and just how much I wanted to be with them," Chapelle said.

Between 1991 and 2010, Chapelle spent about 15 years behind bars for property theft. On more than a dozen occasions over that period, his young family was able to spend as many as three days at a time living with him.

The stays are linked to a long-standing program aimed at increasing the chances of inmates successfully reintegrating into society after their release.

"We're not for the five-metre, barbed-wire penitentiary fence interrupting the view, the scene could easily have been mistaken as an everyday family experience.

Some experts say Canada's so-called private family visit program, which began in 1980 as a pilot project, plays an important role in rehabilitating offenders, and also provides corrections officers with a useful tool for encouraging good behaviour from inmates.

The program has received recent attention after a media report that Kelly Ellard, a notorious killer in British Columbia, is eight months pregnant following a conjugal visit from her boyfriend.

Lisa Kerr, a law professor at Queen's University in Kingston, Ont., said the program recognizes that the majority of federal inmates will be released and that it is in society's best interest to make that process as successful as possible.

"Close personal relationships are part of what makes people have hope about their future and gives them reason to invest in their correctional programming and move towards a release plan," she said.

Italy's 'soul is disturbed'

NATURAL DISASTER

Powerful quake strikes at nation's identity

The third powerful earthquake to hit Italy in two months spared human life Sunday, but struck at the nation's identity, destroying a Benedictine cathedral, a medieval tower and other beloved landmarks that had survived the earlier jolts across a mountainous region of small historic towns.

Lost or severely damaged in the shaking were ancient Roman walls, Gothic and Baroque churches and centuries-old paintings crushed beneath tons of brick, sandstone and marble.

Italian Premier Matteo Renzi said the nation's "soul is disturbed" by the series of quakes, starting with the deadly Aug. 24 event that killed nearly 300 people, two back-to-back temblors on Oct. 26, and the biggest of them all, a 6.6-magnitude quake that shook people out of bed Sunday morning. It was the strongest quake to hit Italy in 36 years.

An aerial view of the destroyed town of Amatrice as an earthquake with a 6.6 magnitude struck central Italy on Sunday. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

There were no reports of fatalities — a fact attributed to the evacuation of sensitive areas and fragile city centres. Some 3,600 people had been moved to shelters, hotels and other temporary accommodations after last week's quakes. Many who stayed behind were sleeping in campers or other vehicles, out of harm's way.

Renzi vowed to rebuild houses, churches and businesses, saying, "a piece of Italian identity is at stake at this moment."

"Feeling the earth collapse beneath your feet is not a metaphorical expression, but it is what happened this morning, and half of Italy felt this," Renzi said.

The quake struck another painful blow to the rich artistic heritage of villages that dot the Apennine Mountains.

The worst damage was reported in Norcia, a town in Umbria closest to the epicenter. Two churches were destroyed — the 14th century Basilica of St. Benedict, built on the traditional birthplace of St.

This handout released by Italian broadcast channel Sky Tg24, shows firefighters helping nuns in Norcia after the quake on Sunday. SKY TG24/AFP/GTY IMAGES

Benedict, founder of the Benedictine monastic order; and the Cathedral of St. Mary Argentea, known for its 15th century frescoes. Only the cracked facades were still standing, with most of the structures disintegrating into piles of rubble and dust.

Television images showed nuns rushing into the main piazza as the bell tower appeared on the verge of collapse. Later, nuns and monks knelt in prayer in the main piazza. A firefighter appealed to a priest to help keep residents calm in an effort to prevent them from looking for loved ones.

When the quake struck, nuns from the Saint Mary of Peace monastery in Norcia were praying and singing hymns. The shaking caused their building to collapse and badly damaged their sleeping quarters. Later, firefighters escorted them back inside to retrieve holy books. Then an aftershock hit.

"But we had courage, because we were in our house and the Lord protects us," one nun said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

E-MAILS

Clinton stays on course

Hillary Clinton vowed Sunday that she would not be "knocked off course" in the election's final days, as she sought to push past a new FBI e-mail inquiry in a sexting probe that delivered a late jolt to her race against Republican Donald Trump.

"I'm not stopping now, we're just getting warmed up," Clinton declared during a packed rally with gay and lesbian supporters in battleground Florida. "We're not going to be distracted, no matter what our opponents throw at us."

Trump campaigned in Las Vegas at a casino owned by billionaire GOP megadonor Sheldon Adelson and accused the justice department, without offering evidence, of trying to protect Clinton following the FBI's discovery of new e-mails that could be related to its investigation into Clinton's use of a private e-mail server.

Clinton's advisers and fellow Democrats pressured FBI Director James Comey anew to release more details about the e-mails, including whether Comey had even reviewed them himself. The message was aimed at gathering more information about what the bureau is seeking from a computer that appears to belong to disgraced former New York Rep. Anthony Weiner, the estranged husband of Huma Abedin, one of Clinton's closest advisers.

Tim Kaine, Clinton's running mate, said Comey owed it to the public to be more forthcoming about the e-mails under review by the FBI with only nine days remaining before the Nov. 8 election. Calling Comey's announcement "extremely puzzling," Kaine said that if Comey "hasn't seen the e-mails, I mean they need to make that completely plain."

Makeshift migrant church in Calais holds final service

Ethiopian Coptic migrants pray as they arrive at a makeshift Orthodox church in "the jungle," on Sunday. AFP/GTY IMAGES

With poignant prayers, scores of migrants attended the final service Sunday at a makeshift church in what remains of the squalid camp in the French port of Calais.

Mainly Eritrean migrants squeezed into the service at a small Orthodox church erected at the camp that has come to epitomize Europe's struggle to absorb migrants and refugees.

The church is one of many handmade structures — including mosques, schools and shops — that demonstrated the migrants' enterprising spirits and offered them solace amid hardship.

French authorities are evacuating the residents of the so-called "jungle" and razing its tents and shanties, which housed up to 10,000 people at its height. The slum-like conditions at the camp became an embarrassment to the French government, which is now relocating its residents to sites around France and urging the British government to do more to help.

Calais, a gateway to the English Channel, has long been a magnet for migrants from the Mideast and Africa seeking to reach Britain.

The clear-out operation is expected to finish soon. Aid group Auberge des Migrants called for visitors to join in Sunday's service to pay homage to those who built the church. Some of the migrants have apparently been living in the church itself since surrounding tents have been torn down. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Canada, EU sign free trade deal

ECONOMY

Trudeau says the 'work is only just beginning'

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau revelled in a long-awaited moment Sunday as Canada's free trade deal with the European Union was signed, but not before recognizing the challenges ahead to bring it fully into force.

Trudeau expressed hope that the so-called provisional application of the deal — approved only by the Canadian and European parliaments but not Europe's 28 states and myriad regional governments — might happen within months.

That, said Trudeau, would result in 98 per cent of the deal coming into force. That's much higher than the 90 per cent estimate that most European and Canadian officials have said would accompany provisional application of the Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement, known as CETA.

Trudeau had initially expected to sign the deal in Brussels days ago, but the restive Belgian region of Wallonia nearly killed it because its opposition to the pact's investor-state dispute settlement mechanism gave it a veto under Belgium's complicated constitution.

After seven arduous years of negotiation, Trudeau joined presidents of the European Council and European Commission, Donald Tusk and Jean-Claude Juncker, and signed the massive 1,600-page pact and its accompanying strategic partnership agreement.

The road to full ratification remains long. After Trudeau and his EU counterparts took a moment Sunday to revel in the milestone, the prime minister was willing to acknowledge it would take more than ceremony to fully ratify the deal.

"The work is only just beginning right now," Trudeau said.

"It's not just signing the accords, as difficult and important as that is. It's ... the followup, that we continue to demonstrate and give tools to small and medium-sized businesses."

Trudeau didn't betray a hint of bitterness towards the socialist regional government of Wallonia, led by Paul Magnette, which picked up the anti-CETA baton that had flourished previously in France, Germany and Austria.

"The fact that throughout people were asking tough questions of a deal that will have a significant impact on our economies, and giving us the opportunity to demonstrate that that impact will be positive, is a good thing," Trudeau said. "That is what a democracy is."

With the Liberals and Conservatives both favouring the deal, its approval will sail through Parliament.

But Europe is another matter.

The European Parliament must approve CETA, with approval expected to come in early 2017. However, the deal must be ratified by the EU's 28 countries and several more smaller regional governments such as Wallonia.

It's not just signing the accords, as difficult and important as that is. It's the followup.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

'Zero rate' hearings may shift data plans

Canada's telecom giants go head-to-head this week at hearings that could result in a dramatic change to the way Internet is delivered across the country.

The hearings are being held as new figures show Canadians' appetite for data is ballooning.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission review, being held in Gatineau, Que., stems from a complaint about Quebec-owned Videotron over the way it bills customers for the data they use.

The company launched an unlimited music streaming service in August 2015, allowing its customers to stream music from specific third-party services without it counting toward their monthly data cap, a practice dubbed as zero rating, also known as differential pricing.

The Public Interest Advocacy

Centre complained the new service allowed Videotron to discriminate against other music-streaming services that were still subject to data usage fees.

Major service providers including BCE Inc. and Telus Corp. are in favour of the practice, arguing it results in more choice.

Rogers Inc., on the other hand, calls zero rating discriminatory,

The CRTC's annual Communications Monitoring Report for 2016, issued last week, gave weight to the importance of the data cap hearings. It revealed that the average amount of data downloaded by Canadians has skyrocketed, with broadband usage increasing 40 per cent from 2014 to 2015, and Canadians downloading an average of 93 gigabytes monthly. URBAN ETIQUETTE ELLEN VANSTONE

Dear Ellen,

I'm 33 and my boyfriend is 40. He's the greatest guy I've ever met. I have a long history of awful boyfriends and failed relationships. So when I met him I was done with romance and only wanted friendship. I knew he didn't want kids (he has a 10-year-old and had a vasectomy) but since we were just friends, I was not thinking babies.

Then I fell in love with him. Now, after two years, all I want is a baby with him. I tried to end things and meet other guys but it didn't feel right so we got back together. The time we spent apart made me realize I don't want kids just for the sake of having kids. I want a baby with him. I don't want to pressure him but I'm 33 and I'm so ready and I love him! I don't know what to do.

Signed, So Confused

Dear So Confused,

Wow. You're in a tough situation, and I feel for you.

THE QUESTION I knew my boyfriend didn't want kids, but now all I want is a baby with him. I don't want to pressure him. What should I do?

I'm not the sort of person who thinks everyone should have kids. But for people who unequivocally want to reproduce, being denied that experience can feel truly tragic.

If you were desperate to have a baby with or without this guy, I'd say go ahead, put your cards on the table, and let the chips fall where they may relationship-wise.

But your situation is a little different, since you say you don't want a baby for its own sake, but only if you can have one with him. I get that, too. Unconditional love for your very own small mammal is a wondrous experience, and sharing that love is a joy you can't overestimate. But it does make your situation more difficult.

No doubt your friends have offered much useless advice. Count your blessings and settle for the relationship you've got. Or: If you have a baby, there's no guarantee you'll stay together and then you'll end up being a single mom instead of a woman in a relationship with the world's most perfect guy. Or: Get a dog. Etc.

I actually agree with all those suggestions. But I also sense you're in no state to accept them. So I'll be more practical.

In terms of etiquette, the answer is simple. Using emotional manipulation to pressure your boyfriend into parenthood (whether it's via vasectomy reversal or adoption) is not considerate or polite. Nor, I hope it goes without saying, is physical force. Rendering your boyfriend unconscious and hiring a back-alley doctor to secretly perform a vasectomy reversal is an absolute etiquette no-no.

Note also that emotional blackmail, like most morally indefensible behaviours, is never pragmatic. You could get a baby out of it, but the negative impact on your relationship might be irreversible and regrettable.

Assuming you have openly and thoroughly discussed this with your boyfriend, your choice seems to come down to: a) staying with him and not having a baby; or b) leaving him and not having a baby.

Either way, you're going to have to come to terms with some disappointment, and the sooner you deal with that, the happier you'll be in the long run.

Millennials are turning their backs on Trudeau

Vicky Mochama
Metro

Last week, young protesters at the Canadian Labour Congress turned their backs on Justin Trudeau. I asked two young people — Zoe Luba, 22, a community organizer for the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now (ACORN) of B.C., and Jerilynn Webster, 32, a rapper from Vancouver — to talk about how Trudeau was doing with young people.

Vicky: What did you think of the protesters?

Jerilynn: Justin Trudeau promised a lot of things and hasn't followed through or has been silent on issues. I really feel like young people are allowed to speak out against him. He hasn't been true to his word, especially through environmental issues like the Site C Dam approval and the LNG approval. Young people are very knowledgeable on climate change and the issues of what's happening in their communities.

Zoe: Any dissent from the status quo should be cherished. It takes a lot to put yourself out there and do something big like turning your back on the prime minister of Canada. It could lead to a lot of backlash.

Vicky: Do you share that sense of disappointment that people are now expressing?

Jerilynn: Yes. (Trudeau's) persona shines so bright. When he was approving projects that affect our environment — not just for First Nations but for all people — that's where the disappointment came in.

Zoe: I appreciate that he's going to First Nations reserves or marching in Pride but I hope that he recognizes that he's only doing those things so the next prime minister actually comes from those identities.... He paves the way. It's easier for him as a white straight cis man to do that. I hope he recognizes that.

Vicky: He's the minister for youth but he's ultimately the prime minister for the next three-plus years. What do you hope to see in Year 2 of his prime ministership?

Jerilynn: There need to be more programs for young people who want to be connected to their culture. I'm talking specifically about indigenous youth. There's a state of emergency for indigenous youth because they're committing suicides at high rates.... Residential schools took away our cultural songs, dances, ceremonies, land and language. So increasing indigenous language funds and youth programming that is connecting youth to those things that residential schools and the Canadian government took from indigenous people.

Zoe: Are we talking about realistically or in a perfect world? In a perfect world, he should remove Canada from the global capitalist system. But is that actually going to happen in the next three years? No.

Biographical series The Crown hits all the right notes

Shinan Govani
For Torstar News Service

The Crawleys have nothing on the Windsors.

That was just one of my ascendant thoughts when making my way through the lavish new series The Crown, making its world premiere on Netflix Nov. 4.

Though many are a-purr about it being a substitute show for those who miss their regular dosage of Julian Fellowes — Downton Abbey, if you will — it is and isn't.

Yes, you've got all the trappings of period porn — the jewels! The getups! The table-settings! A scene of galloping horses running along the sea against a soupy grey sky right out of a J.M.W. Turner water-colour!

And yet, this 10-part Netflix offering — written by Peter Morgan, who also scripted The Queen, with Helen Mirren — is more like the stepchild spawn of Downton Abbey and House of Cards.

Where Downton was always a Ferrero Rocher of a series — a place where family and hearth ruled the day, where even sad-emoji storylines saw love triumph and goodness reign — The Crown, tracking the earliest years of Queen Elizabeth II — is a darker chocolate still.

Its core subject is power — be it gender politics (a girl at 25 years old becoming, in 1952, the most famous woman in the world), the chessmanship of palace courtiers, the see-saw between her and Winston Churchill (who's in the winter of his life — and the first of 13 prime ministers, and counting, she'll come up against).

Another thing: in the way in which The Crown leeches off far-away-but-not-too-far history, it's the best such series since Mad Men, with some of the same nuance and empathy. (There is, for instance, one fabulous scene involving the elaborate pantomime involved in connecting phone lines, in an attempt to put in a call from the Queen's sister, Princess Margaret, to Her Majesty.)

And, OK, while I'm comparing other shows, let's just say that the way in which The Crown throbs with the tensions of social codes, broken at the breaker's peril — not to mention the insidiousness of emotional repression — it's dicier than anything you'll see on The Walking Dead.

Claire Foy nails the role of Queen Elizabeth II in both her girlishness and her steeliness, while bringing us the origin story of a woman who's been famous for longer than any other on earth. CONTRIBUTED

OBSERVATIONS FROM THE CHEAP SEATS

1 Households, meet names

The ensemble is top-notch, The Crown providing a fresh crop of names we're going to be seeing a fair amount in the celebrity ecosystem. Claire Foy's eyes do a lot of work here, her Elizabeth II never better than when she is watching and being watched.

Matt Smith, who plays Prince Philip — the one-time navy cadet who must deal with kneeling to her at the coronation — is also a standout.

2 Sister, sister

Whatever psycho-warfare that went forth between Mary and Edith in Downton Abbey looks like positive child's play compared to the pas de deux between the Queen and her sis, Margaret, in The Crown. The latter, who eventually begins lashing out against the monarch both to her face and through subtle digs through the press, has to live in the Queen's proverbial shadow. Vanessa Kirby, who plays Princess Margaret, is on point.

3 In exile, a former king

The first few episodes of The Crown are best viewed as kind of sequel to The King's Speech. It all gets going, that is, with King George VI, played by Jared Harris, on the throne, his health slowly fading.

Meanwhile, the ghosts of a previous world-stopping scandal — when Edward VIII abdicated the throne some 16 years prior in a desire to marry American divorcee Wallis Simpson — looms in the corners. Both Edward and Wallis show up, and the two of them begin acting as a kind of Greek Chorus on the goings-on at Buckingham Palace. The hate, meanwhile, is mutual.

'Technology makes me happy'

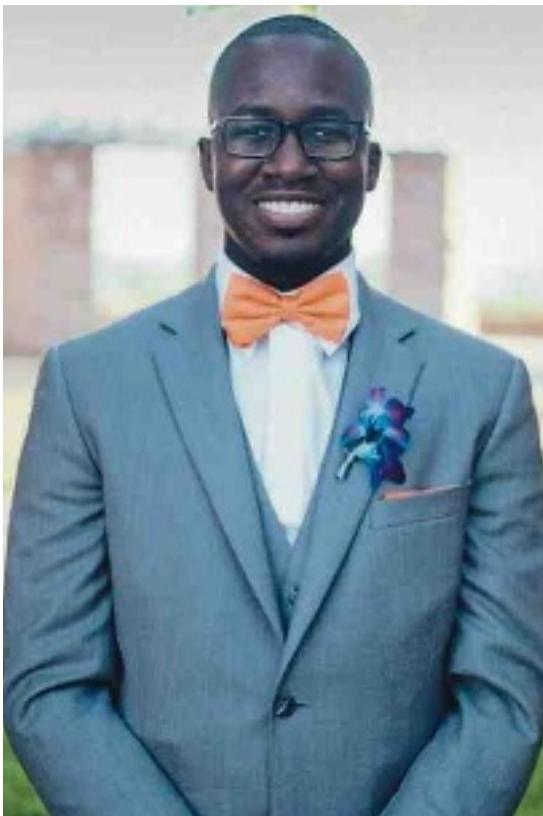

WHY I LIKE MY JOB

Steven Murray, 26, Operations IT Specialist at Veridian Connections

My first stint in the IT industry involved fixing computers for friends and family. That eventually developed into a small side business while I studied the computer programmer analyst program at Durham College. During my final year of studies, I signed on with Veridian Connections for a 12-month internship, which naturally led to a full-time position.

My duties now involve supporting Veridian's powerline technicians with the use of their computer tablets. I helped design the system called 'Mobile Workforce Management,' which the technicians now use to inspect equipment and to coordinate the movement of Veridian assets in the field. I also work closely with our GIS (Graphical Information System) group. They are responsible for inputting engineering drawings into the database to be viewed by the company.

I enjoy working in this field because it allows me to be creative in finding solutions to problems. Also, there's an amount of pride that comes along with knowing the software I'm creating will be used by many people for years to come. In general, helping people with technology makes me happy.

THE BASICS: IT Specialist

$48,691

Median annual salary for an entry-level IT specialist. Many professionals move on to senior roles as IT Manager or IT Architect, generating a minimum of $61,000 per year.

+9%

Projected job growth rate over the next eight years.

HOW TO START

Although a bachelor's degree in computer sciences or information systems will go a long way, there are a variety of two-year diploma programs that train students in system diagnostics, data communications, applied Internet technology and general technical support. Popular programs include computer programming, database application development, and computer networking and technical support.

WHERE YOU CAN GO

Whether a start-up or large corporation, most employers are actively seeking service specialists, network technicians and IT administrators to provide support. Candidates with strengths in customer service, programming, network configuration and software development can expect to connect with exciting careers in banks, consulting firms, government agencies and manufacturing plants, to name a few.

NEXT CAREER STEP

Current and aspiring IT specialists should consider researching and learning the following to keep up with today's ever-changing labour trends: Database user interfaces and query software (MS Access, MySQL), operating systems and networking software (Cisco IOS, Linux, Microsoft) and web platform development software (Apache Tomcat, Drupal and JavaScript). Of course, these are only a handful of examples — new technologies, languages, software and hardware are constantly emerging.

SPENDING

Living those caviar dreams on a tuna can budget

There's a trend among folks to define themselves by the brands they buy. The people fall for brand names, and they fall hard, whether it's a designer handbag or a hot new piece of technology.

It seems these people's self-esteem is less about what's inside and more about how they can get other people to admire — or is it envy — them.

Designer labels were once the domain of the wealthy, but easy access to credit has let people buy crap with a label they really can't afford and still pay their rent.

If they had to choose, I wonder how many would have opted to spend their monthly food allowance on a high-priced brand? But later, as their disposable income is eaten up by monthly payments, they beat their breasts and wail about the mess they've made.

So why are people willing to go into debt for the dubious pleasure of saying that they own a specific brand? Could the lure of the label be more than just a case of "Wannabe Wonderful"?

From the Institute of Education at National Sun Yat-Sen University in Taiwan comes research that demonstrates brands matter to people's egos. And it's not just the young who are susceptible. In one experiment, seniors were asked to compose resumes on Macs, some with generic keyboards and some with Apple accessories. Y'know what? Those assigned to the computers with generic accessories expected to make less ($976) than those who used the Apple accessories ($1,071). What's up with that?

In a second experiment, after completing complicated dating profiles, students were given the phone number of their "match" and a phone in which the battery was dead. Researchers gave half the students a generic replacement battery and the other half a brand-name battery. After five-minute phone calls, students were asked to rate, on a scale of 1 to 7 (1 being "least attractive" to 7 being "very attractive"), how they thought their matches would rate them. Those using the generic product rated their attractiveness at an average of 3.7; the brand-name group rated themselves at 4.6.

Have we become so brand-focused that the kind of battery we use impacts our self-perceptions? Wow.

And how do we protect our children from this phenomenon? I know I don't want either of my kids to believe that they

$ MONEY

Making choices

Are you a brand hound? Does the label matter so much that you wear it like a badge of honour? And do you spend money you could be saving for your future to impress others and, perhaps, yourself? Some brands come with quality assurance. Some are simply a signal to others that you're special because you can afford the label. But if you can't actually afford the label — if you're buying anything on credit — then the image you're creating is a lie. And you should stop lying, at least to yourself.

can buy a sense of self. I want that sense of who they are to come from what they achieve and how they interact with the world. I want them to know who they are. I want them to be happy and I want their stuff to play no role in defining them.

Another draw as Redskins rue comedy of OT errors

NFL

Dalton fumble, Hopkins miss let Bengals off the hook

The Washington Redskins and Cincinnati Bengals played to a 27-27 draw Sunday in London as the NFL got its second tied game in a season for the first time since 1997.

The sold-out crowd of 84,488 at Wembley Stadium left deflated and even puzzled as the regulation-time shootout between Kirk Cousins and Andy Dalton turned into an overtime comedy of errors.

"It definitely feels more like a loss than a win, because we moved the ball so well and had so many opportunities to win," Cousins said. Washington (4-3-1) appeared to have the game won with 2:13 left in overtime, but Dustin Hopkins hooked his 34-yard field goal attempt wide left.

Hopkins — whose first overtime attempt sailed smoothly through the uprights but was negated by a last-second Bengals timeout — appeared calm and unruffled in the locker room. "It was slick out there, but that didn't have an effect on any of my kicks," said Hopkins, who also was badly short on a 55-yard attempt at the end of the first half.

back with 1:11 remaining when Dalton fumbled at the Bengals 47 on a quarterback sneak. Cousins couldn't connect downfield and tossed his final desperate pass tamely into the sideline to preserve the draw.

Cincinnati is 3-4-1.

The unlikely result came one week after the Seattle Seahawks and Arizona Cardinals tied 6-6. "Obviously not winning the game is disappointing," Bengals coach Marvin Lewis said. "We had opportunities on both sides of the ball to win it."

Cousins finished with 38 completions for a season-high 458 yards on a team-record 56 attempts, with touchdowns to Jordan Reed and Jamison Crowder. He also threw an inconsequential interception on a deep ball.

Dalton completed 27 of 42 for 284 yards and a touchdown to Tyler Eifert, who saw his first significant game action following off-season back surgery. Eifert made nine catches for 102 yards, while A.J. Green generated 121 yards on nine catches. Dalton also tossed a costly interception early in the fourth quarter with the Bengals driving deep into Washington territory.

WORLD SERIES

Ticket prices falling with Cubs on brink

A pair of World Series losses for the Chicago Cubs led to a drop in the asking prices for Game 5. About 4-1/2 hours before the scheduled start of Sunday night's game against Cleveland, asking prices on StubHub started at $748.

Before Game 3 at Wrigley Field on Friday, the lowest asking price was $1,019. The Indians led the Series 3-1, needing one win for their first title since 1948.

Atmosphere outside the century-old North Side ballpark also was dampened, with only a few people outside Murphy's Bleachers rather than a lengthy line.

After a pair of relatively warm days, the temperature had dropped into the low 50s Sunday afternoon with a stiff wind. The Cubs last won the Series in 1908.

Chan gets Stojko advice after gold

Imagine running a 1,500-metre cross-country race up and down hills, while leaping over barriers and carrying a sack of potatoes. That's how Elvis Stojko describes the long program in men's figure skating.

The win wasn't assured until New Orleans' much-maligned defence came up with a stop on Seattle's final drive. Russell Wilson took the Seahawks (4-2-1) to the New Orleans 10, where on one final play he passed into the end zone. Jermaine Kearse caught it but landed out of bounds.

Brady equals record as Patriots defeat Buffalo

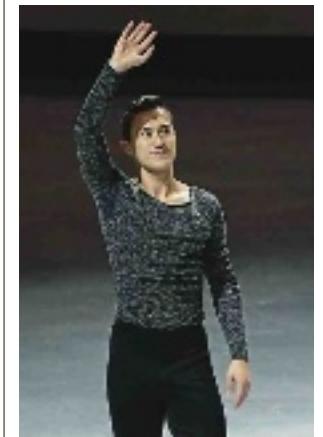

Patriots quarterback Tom Brady asserted his on-field ownership of the Bills again, matching an NFL record in beating them for the 26th time.

Brady went 22 of 33 for 315 yards and threw four touchdowns. He improved to 26-3 against Buffalo, and matched a record set by Brett Favre, who went 26-9 against Detroit. The Patriots (7-1) have won four straight since Brady returned after serving his four-game "Deflategate" ban. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The mistakes were many on Saturday. To keep pace with his competition, Chan debuted an ambitious program that included three quads. He started off beautifully, landing a huge quad and triple Axel, but fell on his second quad attempt, and turned the third into a triple. He downgraded several jumps over the final lung-busting couple of minutes.

On a night that saw all but Canadian Kevin Reynolds struggle, Chan's was one of three gold medals for the host nation.

RECIPE Roasted Pepper Penne

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

You know when you don't have time to make dinner? This is the meal you make. Enjoy the sweet-nest of roasted peppers, creamy cheese and satisfying pasta.

Ready in 25 minutes

Prep time: 10 minutes
Cook time: 15 minutes
Serves 6

Ingredients

- 500g penne
- 4 peppers (red, yellow and orange)
- 2 shallots, sliced
- 1/4 cup olive oil, plus 1 tbsp
- salt
- 1 large clove garlic
- pat of butter
- 1/2 cup shredded Asiago cheese (you can use parmesan)
- handful basil leaves, chopped

Directions

1. Preheat oven to 400 and prepare baking sheet with non-stick spray.

2. Dice peppers into bite-sized pieces and slice shallots into strips. Toss with 1 Tbsp of olive oil and salt. Roast in the oven until tender and browned, about 15 to 20 minutes.

3. In a big pot of salted water, prepare pasta according to package directions. Before draining, reserve 1/4 cup of pasta water.

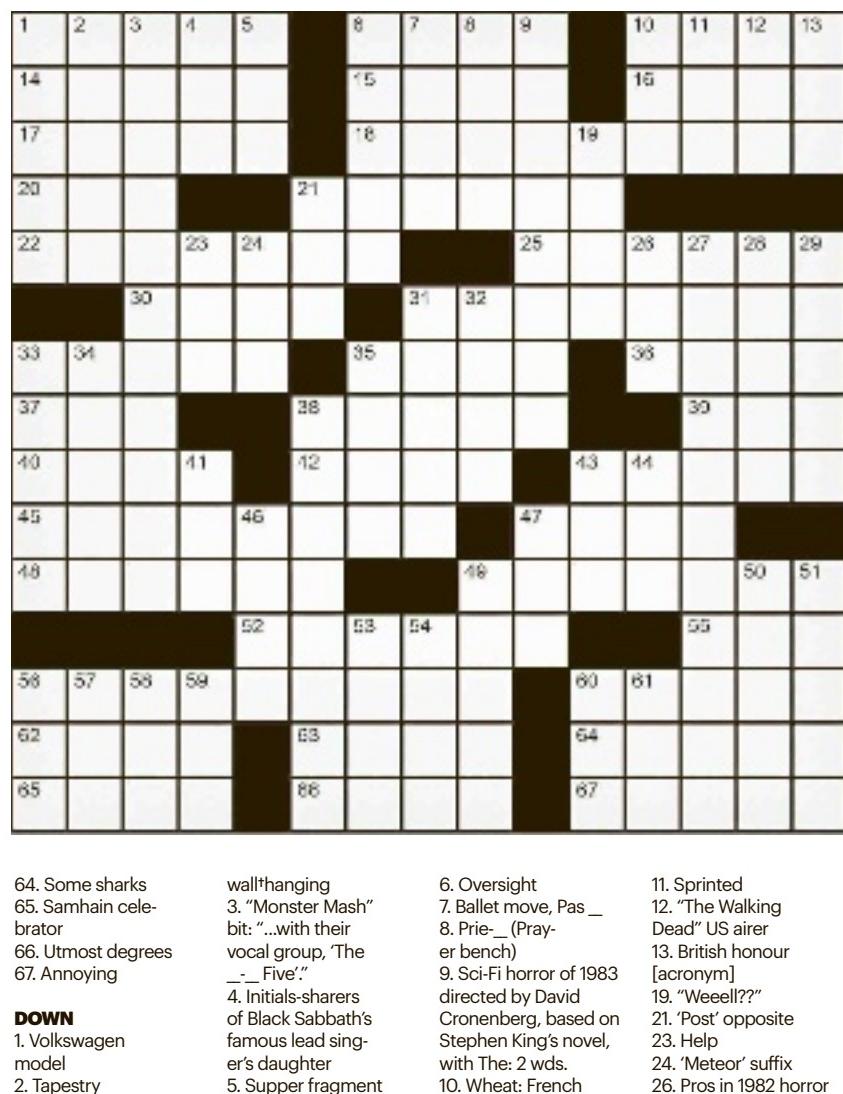

4 Place drained pasta back into pot over no heat. Stir in reserved water, about 1/4 cup oil and butter. Using a microplane, grate clove of garlic into the pasta. (while the pasta is hot so it cooks the garlic a bit.) Stir in the roasted peppers and cheese.

5 Stir in basil and then sprinkle the top with a bit more cheese, serve and enjoy!

 IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
You have lots of energy today to attend to banking needs, as well as anything related to shared property and inheritances. You will defend your own best interests, that's for sure.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Discussions with partners and close friends will be lively today! You also will attract energetic people.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
You can get a lot done at work today because you're on the ball and full of energy! A female co-worker might help you. Do whatever you can to get better organized.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
This is the perfect day for Halloween because the Moon is in Scorpio. (Boo!) Scorpio is all about skeletons, spiders, snakes, secrets and scary moments!

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Your interaction with a family member will be powerful today. Quite likely, this person will be a female. Just go with the flow and be agreeable. (Wear a mask if necessary.)

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Short trips, errands and conversations with others will make this a busy day. Parents will get out with their kids to go trick-or-treating.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You have good moneymaking ideas today, which is why you should give them some serious thought. Some of you will think of ways to make home improvements.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Today the Moon is in your sign, which gives you lots of energy for Halloween stunts. Believe it or not, Halloween is a Scorpio holiday. (Who's behind that mask?)

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You will enjoy being in costume today, because Venus is in your sign. Sagittarians love all kinds of holidays, because they're an excuse for fun and good times!

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Your interaction with a female friend will be fun and energetic today! Get into the spirit of things. Hand out some candy to the kids in your neighborhood.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Personal details about your private life might be made public today. (I guess someone will find out you always wanted to fly a helicopter.) Trick or treat!

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
If you can travel today, by all means do. If you can't travel, just look outside, because Halloween costumes might be a stimulating change.
